IIT Kanpur develops novel nanoparticles to protect rice crop from the replica of the Taj Mahal.

A team of researchers led by Dr Santosh K Misra, and Piyush Kumar from the Department of Biological Sciences & Bioengineering of IIT Kanpur has developed a novel nanoparticle-based bio-degradable carbonoid-metabolite (BioDCM) that can protect agricultural crops from fungal and bacterial infections, in collaboration with researchers Dr C Kannan and Divya Mishra from the ICAR-Indian Institute of Rice Research, and Dr R Balamurugan and Mou Mandal from the School of Chemistry, University of Hyderabad. This comes as the second such innovation in the agriculture sector since last year from IIT Kanpur. Last year, out of the 107 patents filed by the institute, one path-breaking invention was the Bhu-Parikshak soiltesting device that has proven to significantly reduce the time and hassle required for testing soil in the lab. Adding to the effective innovations for farmers, the invention of these novel nanoparticles would prove to act as shields to protect the crops, especially rice crops from infection and diseases. Prof Abhay Karandikar, Director, IIT Kanpur, said, "Our institute has undertaken many innovative hightech projects to help farmers. As the problems faced by the farmers are multifold, our efforts also have been relentless to enrich the whole ecosystem of farming. In that regard, the invention of these novel nanoparticles would lessen the worries of crop infection and boost crop yield. I congratulate the whole team for their efforts in delivering another boon to the farmers."
